

The next generation of artists will make their own creative tools.

Artists already learn complex software. Cursor is a new creative environment where artists can build tools around their practice while staying in control. They see underlying files and review every change before it becomes part of their work. Cursor Loves Indie expands who sees themselves as capable of building software.

Cursor comes from indie origins, carrying the instinct to learn quickly, make its own tools, and stay close to the work.

That same instinct becomes a campaign. Cursor partners with artists across visual art, film, fashion, and music. Reels and short-form content follow the process. Artists begin with: 'I wish I had a tool that...' They show what they made with Cursor and nominate the next discipline to respond. Cursor Cafés and hands-on workshops give them a place to meet and find collaborators. Cursor Loves Indie becomes Indie Loves Cursor when the community answers back.
